Rural Proud & At the Table: Closing Out an Incredible Year with NREDA

By Lisa Hurley, Outgoing President, National Rural Economic Developers Association

As we close out another year at the National Rural Economic Developers Association (NREDA), I am filled with gratitude, pride, and excitement for what lies ahead. Serving as President this past year has been an incredible honor, and it reinforced what I already knew to be true: rural economic developers are some of the most innovative, collaborative, and committed professionals in our field.

Our 2025 Annual Conference in Nashville was nothing short of incredible. From powerful keynote conversations to hands-on sessions and meaningful peer connections, the energy in the room was unmistakable. We tackled the issues that matter most to rural communities—housing, workforce, infrastructure, entrepreneurship, and leadership—and we left better equipped and inspired to move our work forward. The Annual Conference is always a reminder that when rural professionals come together, progress happens.

Farm Bill expiration: What counties need to know

By Owen Hart, Legislative Director, Agriculture & Rural Affairs - Rural Action Caucus and Rachel Yeung, Legislative Assistant

On September 30, 2025, the 2018 Farm Bill, officially known as the Agriculture Improvement Act of 2018 (P.L. 115-334), expired. While this does not mean an immediate halt to all programs authorized in the Farm Bill, the expiration begins a period of uncertainty for counties and rural residents who rely on resources authorized in the Farm Bill.

Why the Farm Bill matters to counties

The Farm Bill is the nation's most significant legislative package for rural America, shaping food security, agricultural stability, natural resource conservation and rural infrastructure investment. All Farm Bill programs are administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), which directly partners with county governments to deliver services provided by many Farm Bill programs. Nutrition programs such as the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) are essential county-administered or county-supported services that ensure county residents have access to healthy food. Rural counties also rely on the Farm Bill to support farmers through crop insurance and commodity safety nets, to fund broadband and water infrastructure, and to sustain conservation and resilience efforts through Natural Resource Conservation Service (NRCS) programs. In many rural regions, Farm Bill programs represent a critical lifeline for both families and local governments.

This year, NREDA joined together with rural economic development peers in Nashville to “Kick Up” your skills, knowledge and networking for success! We put together a great slate of learning opportunities and dynamic speakers for this year’s conference. In addition to the always popular site selection panel, we tackled new challenges and opportunities facing rural developers and their communities including crisis communications, policies and geopolitics, cyber security, applying AI, next generation board development/leadership, future utility needs and issues (e.g. grid security, generation, politics). That’s not all! Our mobile classrooms had opportunities for every interest, from manufacturing to downtown development to entrepreneurship.
